During 2010-2011 Cameron Russia retained the services of RPI to conduct a comprehensive market research study covering the Russian markets for several specific groups of equipment and services for the oilfield, offshore, transportation and refining/processing segments of the oil and gas industry.

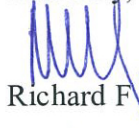

The research involved evaluation of market size (historical, current and mid-term projection), analysis of key trends, competitive environment and purchasing decision-making patterns and factors for each segment analyzed.

In performing the project, RPI demonstrated a thorough understanding of the Russian oil and gas industry and the ability to perform in-depth customized analysis that takes into account all key factors specific to particular market segments. RPI’s analysts worked closely and efficiently with the Cameron team on preparation – based on the study’s findings – for Cameron’s executive sessions that involved discussion of market status, prospects and strategy.

In addition to this custom-made market study, we also regularly use such materials from RPI like the “FSU Oil and Gas Statistical Yearbook”, and other industrial overviews.

I recommend RPI as a professional team of experts in research and consulting on the Russian oil and gas industry.

Sincerely,

Richard F Witt
